Waterloo Chamber special display

Visitors will be able to compare the tiny items in the Waterloo Chamber display with their full-sized equivalents throughout the Castle's State Apartments, such as this miniature clock and full-sized mantel clock.

Items on display include a copper kettle made from a real coin, with the King's head still visible on the base.

Queen Mary's Dolls' House

Queen Mary's Dolls' House has been re-presented to mark the anniversary, including updated lighting and the conservation of the murals and niches in the room that was created to display the Dolls' House almost 100 years ago.

The re-presentation of the Dolls' House, as well as new dolls' eye view films on the Royal Collection Trust website, will allow as many people as possible to appreciate the Dolls' House's tiny rooms, including (clockwise from top-left): the Library; the Kitchen; the King's Bedroom; the Garden, the Entrance Hall, the Saloon; and the Garage.
